

Problem

A system such as that shown in Fig. 6.26 can be used to convert balanced 60-Hz voltages to other frequencies. The synchronous motor has six poles and drives the interconnected shaft in the clockwise direction. The induction machine has four poles and its stator windings are connected to the source in such a fashion as to produce a counter-clockwise rotating field (in the direction opposite to the rotation of the synchronous motor). The induction machine has a wound rotor whose terminals are brought out through slip rings.

- With the system supplied from a 50-Hz source, at what speed does the synchronous motor run?
- What is the frequency of the voltages produced at the slip rings of the induction motor?
- What will be the frequency of the voltages produced at the slip rings of the induction motor if two leads of the induction-motor stator are interchanged, reversing the direction of rotation of the resultant rotating field?
